

Adam Goldstein is a senior financial analyst at a New York hedge fund, covering industrials and consumer financials. As the first analyst hired by his current employer in 2005, he has seen the fund grow to several times its original size. He is responsible for investments in multiple asset classes including equity, debt, options, and credit default swaps. Prior to his current employment, he was a debt analyst on a proprietary trading desk at RBC Capital Markets for 3.5 years. Prior to that, he was an investment banking analyst in the media group at Merrill Lynch.

Adam has an MBA degree from NYU's Stern School of Business and a BS degree in Finance and International Economics from the University of Florida.

Scott Friedman is an investment professional at a multi-billion dollar, New York hedge fund, trading all asset classes and all parts of the capital structure including equities, fixed income, swaps, derivatives, foreign exchange, commodities, and environmental credits globally. Prior to his current employment, Scott worked for six years at Goldman Sachs and was a member of the Risk Arbitrage and Principal Strategies groups.

Scott has a BS degree in Finance and International Economics from the University of Florida. He is also a CFA charter holder and member of the New York Society of Security Analysts