The honors designation is only awarded for undergraduate degrees. (Note: Post-Bac. students are not eligible for the honors distinction.)

Outstanding performance by graduating seniors is recognized by the designation of cum laude, magna cum laude, and summa cum laude. Students must earn a 3.2 grade point average (cum laude), a 3.6 grade point average (magna cum laude), and a 3.8 grade point average (summa cum laude) independently in each of the following:

1. Upper-division coursework (to include all coursework taken after the student reaches 60 credit hours)
2. Major coursework (to include the six required accounting courses, 3000 level and above).

Only coursework taken at the University of Florida will be included in the computations above.

In addition to the academic criteria listed above, students must submit a thesis to receive either the magna cum laude or summa cum laude honors distinction. The thesis is typically an argumentative paper that takes a clear position on an issue. Most papers tend to be directly related to accounting. However, any topic that the student can link to his/her career goals will be considered. The paper must be a minimum of 12-15 pages and properly cite all references.

Provide a statement below of the work to be accomplished. Return to GER 210 after you have obtained the signature and approval from the respective supervisor.
