

Jaime Little

Welcome to the School of Business at the University of Florida! As your academic advisor and career coach I am here to help guide you on a personal path to success. I encourage you to schedule a sit-down appointment with me at least once a semester to discuss your journey. Things to consider as you get underway are:

- Ways to get involved in the campus, local and even global communities (leadership, clubs and organizations, etc.)
- Academic requirements AND opportunities (undergraduate majors, minors, graduate school)
- International studies (study abroad, foreign language studies, elective courses)
- Career development opportunities (internships, networking, resume, interviewing skills)

I look forward to getting to know you and assisting you during your time here at UF and beyond. To help you get to know me a little bit better here is a brief synopsis of my past educational experiences.

I began my college experience in the Swamp in the fall of 1990 not sure what I wanted to major in. “Back in the day” students could be classified as undecided until the middle of their junior year. I did just that to explore many different options. Ultimately, I loved my Sociology classes and enjoyed research and studying societal changes specific to older populations. Upon graduation in summer 1994, I thought about graduate school in Sociology. While deciding if that was the path I wanted to take, I began working at the Graduate Records Office here at UF. That is when I discovered the Graduate Program in Student Personnel in Higher Education. With a sociological background and an interest in academic policy, I decided to continue my graduate studies in the College of Education. During my graduate years, I interned at Indian River Community College and researched “non-traditional” student populations. After my master’s degree was conferred, I continued working as an advisor at IRCC. I then moved on to Santa Fe Community College as a College Preparatory Advisor, working with students re-entering college after many years away from school as well as with students who weren’t quite academically ready to begin college. I came to the School of Business as an Undergraduate Advisor in December of 2000. During the next six years, I worked with new students, transfer students, international students, Preview, Orientation, Probation, teaching Warrington Welcome (First Year Florida) and was a member of the University Student Conduct Committee.

I have recently returned to the School of Business as an advisor after a three-year hiatus to stay home with my third child. I am excited to be back and plan many fulfilling years ahead, ensuring that you and your fellow students are directed to the many amazing opportunities available to you.
