

Warrington College of Business Administration

School of Business

Josh Funderburke

I earned a bachelor's degree in History from Oglethorpe University and a master's degree in College Student Personnel from the University of Florida. Currently I am pursuing a Ph.D. in Higher Education Administration through the UF College of Education.

As a college student I was very involved in activities. I participated in student government, served on the executive boards of two student organizations, and gave back to the community as a brother of Alpha Phi Omega. These activities provide many of the amazing memories I have of college, and they enhanced my academic program through practical experiences. I strongly encourage all students to get involved: it is an investment in time, but an investment that will pay well in the end.

Prior to accepting my current position, I served as a graduate assistant in the School of Business Career & Leadership Programs. Before coming to the University of Florida for graduate school, I worked in student affairs for the Georgia Baptist College of Nursing as well as Mercer University.

Within School of Business Career & Leadership Programs, I am responsible for Warrington Welcome, a freshman seminar for undergraduate business students. I also oversee programming and facilities management for the Bill Alcorn Undergraduate Student Center in Bryan Hall. Additionally, I serve as the UF Students in Free Enterprise Sam Walton Fellow and manage the feedback and assessment activities for the Career & Leadership Programs.
